EPSC Announces Executive Management Changes and Renewal

TORONTO — The Board of Directors of Electronics Product Stewardship Canada (EPSC) has announced changes to the organization that will sustain industry's leadership position in developing and promoting end-of-life electronics stewardship programs across the country. The changes took effect on January 1, 2009.

Mr. Dalton Burger, President, has decided to pursue post-graduate legal studies at Osgoode Hall in Toronto. Mr. Garry Travers, Chair of the Board of Directors, has accepted the position of President on an interim basis. "We wish Dalton success in his new endeavors and thank him for his contributions to EPSC over the past year," said Travers.

In addition, Mr. Jay Illingworth, Vice President, will be leaving EPSC to take on a new role as Harmonization Executive on behalf of the three industry-led electronics stewardship programs in Atlantic Canada, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan. Travers also commented on this new role for Illingworth. "We congratulate Jay on this appointment and look forward to continue to work with him in his new capacity."

Travers is looking ahead to the next few months as a rejuvenation period for EPSC. "Over the coming weeks EPSC will be undertaking a strategic planning and review process to outline activities and milestones for the coming year. We remain committed to succeed in delivering on EPSC's mandate to design, promote and implement sustainable solutions associated with electronics in Canada. The Board of Directors looks forward to ongoing collaboration with governments, key stakeholders, other industry association partners, and consumers, along with the members of EPSC, as this important work continues."

About EPSC

Electronics Product Stewardship Canada (EPSC) is a national electronics end-of-life stewardship organization, committed to environmental leadership. As a not-for-profit organization, EPSC works with an array of partners and stakeholders to design, promote and implement sustainable solutions for Canada's electronic waste problem. EPSC members have demonstrated environmental leadership role by working with stakeholders to create effective industry-led environmental stewardship programs across Canada, by investing in design for environment improvements to their products and processes, and by establishing an innovative vendor qualification program for the responsible recycling of end-of-life electronics. The members of EPSC are leading consumer electronics and information technology equipment manufacturers.
